A band of start-ups is using technology to change the rules of advertising, opening up the market for brands in Tier II

Outdoor advertising grew by 14 per cent in 2015 and is expected to grow by 13 per cent in 2016

AVISHEK RAKSHIT
Kolkata, 29 June

MAPPING THE FUTURE

Read the Pitch Madison Advertising Report for 2016 and one number that stands out is the rising clout of outdoor advertising. The market grew by 14 per cent in 2015 to ₹2,665 crore and in 2016, is expected to grow at 13 per cent. "Higher adoption of digital and technology and greater use of transit media will be seen in 2016, when the total outdoor advertising market is expected to cross ₹3,000 crore," the report said. As more and more advertisers (especially online and mass market brands) seek to build their offline presence, a group of start-ups are using technology and data management strategies to maximise the bang for their buck.

The start-ups are identifying high-value catchment areas and aggregating outdoor spaces (billboards, movable vehicles, bus stand displays and others) in small and mid-sized towns across the country. They apply a range of tech tools, interestingly all built and honed by e-commerce companies. SHoarding, a start-up, calls itself an advertising aggregator. It started off in 2014 and has positioned itself as a one-stop solution for all outdoor advertising needs. The company, founded by IIM-Calcutta alumnus Neeraj Sharda and Sudhanshu Goyal says that it uses a set of algorithms to chart out a full-fledged outdoor campaign for its users. The firm has 60,000 outdoor hoardings on offer. For each spot, the company says, it has a detailed research docket that guarantees advertisers varying degrees of visibility.

"Now, one doesn't need to do a recce to find out the best location and the position to locations at the best prices. ised and run more like and-pop operations.

The aggregators use data from local municipalities to find out the hot-spots. These are then used to identify the places that bring maximum view boards. It then uses data to understand the population in a city or locality. The aggregators further classify audiences in terms of geographic, income and other factors. This helps them deliver a targeted message where that works best.
